

Protecting our evolutionary companions - do our laws measure up?

HOBART - Half day seminar, Monday 5th May, 9am to 12pm - Sandy Bay Campus, University of Tasmania - Flexible Learning Space (below Stanley Burbury Theatre in the University Centre)

Patrick the Wombat. Photo: The Thousands

Exploring the intersections and differences between Earth jurisprudence, animal law and environmental law

The aim of this seminar is to bring together academics, activists, legal practitioners, students and regulators, to explore the diversity of laws and legal frameworks aimed at protecting the animals that live with us on this amazing continent. The seminar will provide three short talks addressing Earth Jurisprudence, environmental law and animal law - and then provide time for discussion, to explore the challenges our legal system must face if we are to protect and nurture all animals within our community of life.

This event is part of a seminar series being hosted by AELA and Voiceless in Sydney on 2nd May, Hobart on 5th May and Brisbane on 12 May, 2014.

For more information, contact: convenor@earthlaws.org.au or visit: <http://www.earthlaws.org.au/events/AELA-Voiceless-Seminars-2014>

SPEAKERS INCLUDE:

Michelle Maloney, National Convenor, Australian Earth Laws Alliance

Emmanuel Giuffre, Legal Counsel, Voiceless

Jess Feehely, Environmental Defenders Office Tasmania

WHO SHOULD ATTEND:

Regulators, academics, researchers, students, activists and anyone interested in the protection of animals in Australian society.

HOW TO BOOK YOUR PLACE:

This workshop is free but places are limited. Please book your place by visiting: <http://trybooking.com/EPGG>